

South African integrated care through different way of allocating resources and roles

By Thembeke Gwagwa

The focus of the input will describe the socio-political context of the South African health system according to the major health challenges which are, unequal distribution of resources; pull and push factors; increased disease burden; slow progress in restructuring the health system and increase in consumer demands.

It will also focus on South Africa's integrated response to HIV, the role played by South African AIDS Council (SANAC) the structure that brings together government, civil society and private sector to create a collective response to the pandemic. How task shifting and decentralisation of comprehensive HIV/AIDS services to primary health level was effectively used to meet the demands for initiating and managing more patients on antiretroviral therapy.
