

Building a new Relationship Centered Model of Primary Care

By Rushika Fernandopulle

Current healthcare delivery models around the world are still centered around transactions, are siloed and physician centered. There is a small but growing number of practices that have decided to start over and build radically new delivery models from scratch, focused on relationship based, team powered care. These rely on different payment models, processes, technology and culture- and have demonstrated impressive improvements in patient and physician satisfaction, clinical outcomes, and lower total healthcare costs through reduction in hospitalizations and unnecessary specialist and procedure use.

Learn from Iora Health, one of the leaders in the United States about their experience developing and implementing the model.
